

Dataseam Hosts Apple Beta Training for New Lion Operating System

Louisville, KY – Leading Apple Certified Trainers and technicians previewed the new training program for the Apple Client Technical class at Dataseam’s downtown Louisville training center. Apple expects to roll out the new certification class, Lion 101, at Apple Authorized Training Centers across the US by mid-October.

The Apple Authorized Training Center Program offers a wide range of IT, creative and service technician training and certifications. Training and certification for Apple products and software are offered at over two hundred training centers across the US. Louisville’s central location was the ideal setting to gather experts for testing and review of Apple’s latest technical training offering.

Dataseam is the only Authorized Apple Training Center in Kentucky and one of only twenty-eight Gold Level centers in the nation. Dataseam provides certification classes on Mac OS X Client, Final Cut Pro, Server, Networking and other workshops designed to help teachers integrate technology in their classroom.

In addition to providing training, Dataseam places new computers in schools for everyday use and networks those computers so scientists can use the processing power to do research on the DataseamGrid.

Researchers at the University of Louisville’s Brown Cancer Center are using the computing power in Kentucky school districts to create the nation’s largest potential cancer drug development pipeline.
